

Teacher's Observations

- It is very motivating for my students to work on real projects, in which something tangible is achieved at the end of the work (Arturo 53 years old).
- For my students the most motivating thing was to work thinking that their work was going to be presented to others who were far away, and to whom it was necessary to motivate (Luis 40 years).
- It was a challenge for my students to do all the work in English. That was really motivating, especially when his level of English was low (Pillar 45).
- Traveling to the university city of Cambridge and presenting his works in English schools was truly a motivating experience (Cañizal 38 years).
- Participating in the Science Fair of the University of Cantabria and sharing the work with others was very motivating for my students (María 60 years).

Teacher's Observations

- Interacting and working with students from another country was very rewarding and motivating for my students (Angel 55 years).
- Connecting and exchanging ideas with professors from the university and other centers was very motivating for my students (Rosa 44 years old).
- I think the idea of working as a group and feeling part of something, made them feel useful and was very rewarding for them (Sonia 45).
- Seeing yourself in the news and being interested in your work and participating in the project made them feel important (Arturo 53 years old).
- My students were very motivated and I think the part that they like the most is to go through the center telling their project and motivating others to participate next year (Eva 35).
